We have no solution for smart phones, true. But if this is positioned in the wrong way, it can hurt feature phone business. Also, it can hurt the future of Java on mobile devices.

I agree… but on the flip side, we need a viable Java solution on mobile (which we don;t have today).
So, in parallel we need to amp up our efforts so we can show that there is an alternative to ADF mobile (and we are working on this), but just pointing it out

Yeah, the issue here is that Oracle as a company must have a consistent strategy. If we throw Java under the bus for mobile development, it needs to be a high level strategic discussion since it has significant revenue and ecosystem impact.

Something to bring up with Hasan.

The customer is looking at KonyOne http://www.kony.com for mobile app development.

Do we have any information on them?
